Second, the great blessings and the benefits that have been secured for us in the whole world by our victory over the Huns. Third, and to us my friends the most important, that we will resolve each for himself that our heroes shall not have fought or died in vain; that we shall see to it that these benefits and blessings which they secured and the sacrifice of our dead has secured for us, shall be enjoyed down to all times, growing brighter and brighter until we have an equality of government of free men throughout the world which was ever intended for the government of the children of men."

The two judges forming the Return Board in place of the Commissioners who were candidates at the primaries. The new primary law requiring number of ballot and verifying results so that the number of ballots cast corresponded with number given out has resulted in a number of small irregular details that necessitated the production of ballot boxes to get spoiled ballots or papers placed in them instead of returned to the Commissioners' Office. Counting can only be done after all these details have been complied with, so the work of counting has been retarded and the official result will not be known until end of the week or beginning of next week. It is not believed that the figures given in our last issue will be materially changed.

ARENDTSTVILLE.

Our farmers who have been cutting their corn report the crop is up to the standard. The rain last Monday put the ground in excellent condition for the farmers to finish their fall seeding, but the acreage will not be as large as usual owing to the high prices of the fertilizers.

Hon. Wm. A. Martin, of Gettysburg sold his house and lot in this town to Samuel Bishop of Butler township for $1275.

Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Emmert, of Franklin Grove, Ill. were recent visitors among relatives here.

Owing to the death of David Weaver last Sunday our town has now only five Civil War soldiers left. They are H. W. Taylor, J. Dorsey Lower, T. G. Heckenluber, Abraham Hoffman, J. H. Wiernman. Directly after the war we had 18 to return home.

Every Dot represents Ten Satisfied Delco-Light Users

More Than 75,000 Satisfied Users

DELCO-LIGHT was designed and built by men who were raised in farm homes—who experienced the discomforts and inconveniences of farm life—and who set out deliberately years ago to develop an electric plant that would provide city advantages for rural communities.

They were the same men whose engineering talent had made DELCO Starting, Lighting and Ignition Equipment for automobiles the standard of the world—they knew electricity—and they knew the needs and problems of farm life—

They knew that an electric plant to give service in a farm home must be simple, so that it would not get out of order and require complicated repairs—

It must be easily operated and require little attention—

It must be very economical in operation—

It must be built to stand hard usage and it must last indefinitely—

It required five years to develop a plant that would measure up to these specifications.

There were five years of hard engineering effort back of DELCO-LIGHT before the first plant was put on the market three and a half years ago.

Today DELCO-LIGHT is furnishing the conveniences and comforts of electricity to more than Seventy-five Thousand farm homes.

It is providing an abundance of clean, bright, economical electric light for these homes. It is furnishing power to pump water, operate washing machine, churn, separator, vacuum cleaner, electric iron, milking machine, and other small machinery.

And everywhere it is demonstrating its wonderful efficiency—and actually paying for itself in time and labor saved.

That's what you want at the price of eggs to-day. Makes every hen a payer by producing eggs nearly all the time instead of about half the time. Eggs is a question of feed. Give hens egg-producing feed and they will produce the eggs. No feed, or the wrong kind of feed, means no eggs.

Ryde's Egg Mash

is an unequalled egg producer, containing animal and vegetable nutrition in the correct proportions to produce results. No guess work or experimenting on the part of the feeder. The increased egg yield overcomes the cost of the mash.

More Eggs, Better Eggs, Bigger Eggs

Try a bag to-day on those hens that are backward and you will be more than pleased with the results.

Ryde's Cream Calf Meal

is the best substitute for milk in feeding all young stock. It supplies them with all the food value found in whole milk in just as digestible a form and in the correct proportions. It does them just as much good as whole milk and you save more than half the feed bill. Every pound makes one gallon of gruel, or rich, nutritious, perfect milk substitute. You take no chances.

An Insistent Insult

By FIELD DOUGLAS

Barbara looked up at the newcomer with a look of surprise. "You are not the same," she said. "You used to be so different."

"There was a question ventured from them relative to women traveling alone."

"I guess an American girl can take care of herself," Barbara answered. "But you may telegraph the Bensons to meet the train in Florence. I forgot that."

"The distance reduced her to 'Bye' and another wave of the hand."

"The compartment was empty, anyway, except that in the farther corner was an Italian, come from Pisa, doubtless. But he was asleep and didn't utter."

"She stepped open the Ruskin that had been the cause of the Partridges' discomfort."

"Mornings in Florence" it was, and she read "Before the Soltan" in anticipation of a new visit to Santa Croce.

"Oh, dear, there was so much to see! She hoped she would remember most of it when she got back to Detroit. Her woman's club would like to talk on the history of Italian art; she talked very well for a girl of twenty-four, if she did think it herself."

"At Pistoia a man climbed in at the door opposite, without folding the Italian. Barbara slapped open her book again, and read 'The Golden Gate.' She must remember that. Ghirlandajo wasn't great, after all; Ruskin said so. She didn't deign to notice the intruder who sat down opposite the sleeper."

"But the intruder apparently deigned to notice her. She could catch a hint of a sight of him out of the corner of her eye, enough to know. Well, he had reason; though Barbara only half admitted to herself she admitted it."

"Now, however, the newcomer actually dared to move over and sit opposite her. She was too deep in Ruskin to care, of course, but it was queer. And, well—I never! Was he speaking to her?"

"Lei parla inglese, signorina?" Barbara looked up blankly. She skimmed details: brown hair and eyes, good eyebrows, clean-cut face; thirty-five, she thought, perhaps a little more. "Suppose I do?" Barbara answered perky.

"Well, then—perhaps—you will allow me to talk to you?" the man replied, in the intonation of the British Isle.

"Why should I?" said Barbara. "We're both English."

"I'm not, and you know it. I suppose you think that you can talk to me because I'm an American. You English always think us unconventional. So we are, but—" Barbara paused, breathless. She was taking care of herself.

"I didn't mean to offend you—really. I beg your pardon."

"He said it like a gentleman. Barbara felt she had been rude."

"I'm not offended," she said amiably. "It's just my way."

"American?" quizzically. Seeing his eyes, she liked him for the step.

"Perhaps; but I'm too patriotic to admit it."

"He looked at her. 'You must forgive me for speaking to you. I have a reason.' Barbara did not blurt the 'Well, I never!' but it thumped inside of her. Then she felt a glancing at the only reason conceivable, and was pleased. 'You may talk if you wish. What do you want to talk about?' He cast a half-glance at the Ruskin in her lap. 'You are interested in painting?' he suggested. 'Yes, I'm looking it up. Been to Lucca to see the Fra Bartolommeo—interesting influence on Raphael.' She poured the phrases haphazardly. The stranger smiled. 'You Americans are very energetic,' he said. 'Don't you care about pictures?' 'Oh, yes,' he answered, 'in a lazy way. I have a few at home—old family Van Dyckes, you know, and some portraits of the eighteenth century. I'm looking a bit more at home. Been to Pistoia for a few days, looking for a Lorenzo di Credi; staying now at Prato for a few days—the elder Lippi at his best, you know, all over the choir.' 'Yes, I know. I haven't seen the Prato frescoes yet; but I'm going to run out to them from Florence.' 'Why don't you stop off now at Prato? We'll soon be there. I'd like to show the pictures to you. There's another train for Florence in two hours.' This time Barbara did blurt out: 'Well, I never!' Then she added, with pert, offended dignity: 'My friends will meet me in Florence station.' She italicized the sentence as she spoke it, to show the man that she was well protected. 'I shall read my Ruskin till I get there,' she added saucily, ripping the book open upside down.

plans for their enjoyment. One evening after she had been playing and singing for some time, Glenn turned to his wife.

"Why don't you keep up your music, Marian?" he demanded.

"I haven't much to keep," she answered lightly. "I never sang well and I cannot play as Ann does. I doubt if my playing or singing would give pleasure to any one."

"Our talents are not the same," replied Ann. "You could come nearer to playing or singing well than I could to writing a poem."

"Songs in a home make more music than poems in a magazine," observed Glenn sourly. "You would be surprised how many poems don't get into magazines, moreover. They don't make much of a sound anywhere save the post office."

"Only now Marian wondered whether he really meant to tease her or to seriously disparage her. Ann, with her usual tact, had changed the subject and the incident passed off."

"Why don't you dress your hair like Ann's?" asked Glenn several days later as he sat at dinner alone with his wife.

She laughed aside the demand at the time, but in the privacy of her room that night she stood before her tall mirror and faced herself and her problem bravely.

She was only a year or two older than Ann, and she looked ten.

She took the pins from her hair and shook the loose strands over her shoulders. Once heavy waves had hung below her waist. Glenn had been proud of it then.

As she stood before the glass now she tried, with patient fingers, to twist the despaired coils into a fashionable coiffure.

"It all went," she mused, "before little Mary came. I would have given the flesh from my bones to have kept the poor little thing alive. Some sacrifices seem to be in vain. But, of course, they aren't really."

Her efforts were finally rewarded by a rather imposing achievement. But she shook her head dubiously.

She brushed her hair into tight little pig-tails, locked her door, and cried herself to sleep.

In the meantime, Ann, aside from the fact that her task was daily becoming more distasteful and irksome, was having a very good time.

Tom DeWitte, one of the older bachelors, was markedly devoted, and Marian would have rejoiced in this turn of Ann's affairs had it not brought another and serious turn in her own.

Tom and Glenn had always been good friends, but after the frequency of Tom's visits to Ann began to be noticeable, Glenn's cordiality ceased.

When he came home one evening and found Tom dining informally at his table he became instantly polite almost to the limit of rudeness. Marian saw the change, and panic swayed her.

The evening of the dinner Ann and DeWitte drove to the theater. Left to themselves, Glenn and Marian faced one another in dumb misery.

"Play and sing for me," rasped Glenn. Marian went to the piano obediently, but her hands trembled and her voice shook.

"I cannot, Glenn—indeed, I cannot," she pleaded.

"It is too bad," he sneered. "The others are not here."

"It is, indeed, I am sorry," she acknowledged, holding her hands tightly together lest their trembling betray her agitation.

"Go—go to your room!" thundered her husband.

DIED AS BEETH'S THE BRAVE

Last Words Uttered by Tyrant's Victims in Tower of London Are Worth Recording.

Reliving the stories of royal cruelty connected with the Tower of London are the immortal "last words" of the brave men and women who had had their heads on the execution block, says a National Geographic Society bulletin.

"God forbid the king shall use any more such mercy to my friends," laughed Sir Thomas More when told that Henry VIII had "mercifully" consented to let him be beheaded instead of hanged, and, to the executioner, as he moved his head aside, "pity that should be cut that has not committed treason."

The countess of Salisbury proudly refused to lay her head on the block because she had committed no wrong, so that, says an observer, apologizing for the executioner, "he was constrained to fetch it off slovenly."

"If you strike me twice I cannot promise you not to stir," warned Monmouth.

Asked to raise his head a bit Algernon Sidney retorted, "Not until the general resurrection; strike on."

"Peter," inquired Sir Walter Raleigh, to keep up the spirits of his attendant, "dost thou know of any plaister to set a man's head on again when it was cut off?"

Consigned to the tower for some thirteen years Sir Walter set a fashion which made a salon out of the palace prison. While he was not attending his garden, and distilling essence from plants, he wrote his quaint "History of the World," and there, too, William Penn wrote "No cross, no crown," not to mention the writings of the duke of Orleans and Sir John Eliot.

FAMILIAR WITH ILL FORTUNE

Men Whose Names Stand High on Roll of Genius Had to Fight for Recognition.

No one need be ashamed of the fact that they may have been, at some time or other, hard up for a meal. Many celebrities have been situated in similar circumstances.

For instance, there was the late Sir Henry Irving, the great genius of the stage. Few people know of the trials this eminent actor went through before he attained even a small modicum of success. He was actually starving on the streets at one time, without a penny to buy a bun.

Then there was Oliver Goldsmith, the author of some of our greatest English classics. Once he lived in a garret and was bothered by a shrewish landlady who demanded "rent down." Oliver Goldsmith had also numerous other debts, which surely ought to have turned him away from literature in disgust as a means of livelihood.

But this Oliver Goldsmith would not allow them to do, and consequently he reaped his reward. And Zola, the affirmation of all people who combine culture with dash, poor Zola also had a bad time of it going through the literary mill. There was a time when editors and publishers used to read his name on a manuscript and promptly send it back.

The Composer's Cigarette.

Brahms always was credited with a gruff mind, and the following story is told of him and the late Erich Wolff:

A cigarette had been offered by the former to the latter, who received it with emotion and placed it carefully in his waistcoat pocket.

"Why do you put the cigarette away? Why not light it now?" asked Brahms, who already had struck a match.

"I cannot smoke it," replied Wolff. "I shall take great care of it; it is not every day that one gets a cigarette from Johannes Brahms."

Thereupon the composer opened his cigarette case again and said, with a smile of satisfaction:

"Then just give me back the good cigarette, will you? For your purpose an imitation will serve just as well."

Market for Hair.

It was stated recently that human hair is worth $2.50 an ounce, and some people have professed surprise at the price. As a matter of fact, the figure is far below the fact. It is true that some human hair can be purchased at so low a figure as $7.50 a pound, but this is the coarsest, commonest stuff, concerning the origin of which it would not be wise to inquire too closely.

From $100 to $250 a pound are quite usual prices for good examples of hair of ordinary colors, while the rarer hues, particularly white and auburn, are much more expensive.

For pure white hair there is always a larger demand than supply, and the prices paid for the best qualities vary from about $25 to $30 per ounce. A well-known London dealer has sold white hair at $500 per pound.

Wasted.

Mr. Jones returned home the other evening in fine spirits. "My dear," said he to his wife, "this afternoon I closed the deal for the new house. I had the title examined and found it perfectly clear. The examination cost me a hundred dollars, but—"

"Now, isn't that a perfect shame!" exclaimed his young wife. "All that money wasted!"—Cartoons Magazine.

Engaging Caller.

"There's a gentleman at the door to see you, mum."

"Are you sure he's a gentleman?"

"Yes, mum. He has the loveliest manners. He asked me if I was your daughter, mum."

MR. ORCHARDIST

Maybe your orchard doesn't get wet with dew in the night, and doesn't get you cold and wet in the mornings before the sun gets busy. But if it does—here's the remedy—A pair of overboots. A light weight rubber boot to be worn OVER the ordinary leather shoe. Protects the leg to the knee, and buckles right below it to keep the top up. When the sun gets up and dries the grass, jerk them off, roll them up, and put them in your pocket—they weigh only 2 1/2 lbs. a pair. Ask to see them the next time you are in town—$2.75 a pair—you will have lots of winter use for them too.

"On the Square"

Even a blouse suit can be slim and straight when cut on such clever lines as this one of Duval de Laine. Note the mink fur collar and how black silk embroidery finishes front and back.

Simple and straight to the hip, agreeable to the eye, tailored with a high neckline. Sleeves and collars are very snug, wide, with a mannish collar and the skirt wide enough to consider both comfort and style.

The "Last Word" In Suits And Coats

THE newest suits and coats have just arrived and bring with them the most authentic news about the approved silhouette, favored materials and popular trimmings.

Both coats and suits insist on the straight line. Coats have rebelled against the old idea that to be warm they must be bulky. This year coats of warm soft fabrics fall straight from shoulder to hem.

The "Grenoble" is one of the most interesting Wooltex designs—it flares smartly on both sides and remains flat at front and back.

Wooltex suits are divided into four distinct and individual types with many variations of novel embroideries, odd stitchery and clever paneling. There's the severe "Tailleur," the Blouse, the trimmed Tailor-Made and the Country Suit; which means that you can find the newest style tendencies interpreted in your own type.

We recommend Wooltex, because the Wooltex label promises superior fabrics so carefully tailored that the correct lines remain throughout the season.

G. W. WEAVER & SON

The Store That Sells Wooltex

Brown Marvella scorns every luxury but its own rich fabric, an unusual sleeve treatment and collar that even as it shuts into folds at the back, keeps its correct slowness and straight lines.
